PLAYS

Donna Abela et al.

SHARP DARTS: CHAMBER PLAYS BY 7-ON PLAYWRIGHTS

A collection of fifteen short scripts reflecting the very different voices of the 7-ON Playwrights—Donna Abela, Vanessa Bates, Hilary Bell, Noëlle Janaczewska, Verity Laughton, Ned Manning and Catherine Zimdahl. These sharp, pointed portraits of Australia are by turns dark, funny, surprising, moving and political, but above all inspiring in their vision and creativity.

PB

May-Brit Akerholt

ELLIDA

A new translation of Henrik Ibsen's The Lady from the Sea

Ibsen's play challenged and exposed the conventions of marriage and society with biting satire and subtle humour. In this fresh adaptation questions of freedom and responsibility, conformity and independence, emotion and rationality prove startlingly contemporary, as relevant as when Ibsen first penned the play in 1888.

ENDANGERED: Three Plays

A trilogy of plays that make a powerful statement on Australia's relationship with the environment in the shadow of global warming.

They Saw a Thylacine by Sarah Hamilton and Justine Campbell, focuses on two women who unknowingly saw the last of a species. This gut-punch reminder of extinction is a captivating story about hoping that the little we do isn't too late. Extinction by Hannie Rayson delves deep into the heart of our own moral choices, and tightly held convictions. It wraps an important conservation message around a unique and personal human story. The Honey Bees by Caleb Lewis is a tale of family and empire; action and consequences; and what happens when the bee finally stings.

AN EYE FOR TALENT

A Life at NIDA

How did an institution that began in a tin shed at the University of NSW become, within forty years, one of the most influential theatre training schools in the world? An Eye For Talent traces John Clark's creative life from his childhood in Tasmania and early training in the U.K., to the inception of NIDA, and his stewardship of NIDA on its way to international success. John describes in detail the system he developed that brought the school its international success, the crises that almost destroyed it on the way, as well as its rapid decline as decades of experience were lost in a few years. An Eye For Talent is an instruction manual on how to create a great theatre school, and how it was lost.

REMEMBERED PRESENCES

Responses to Theatre

This long-awaited collection of 25 years of Croggon's writing ranges from early reviews to wide-focus essays of cultural criticism, from playful meditations on the critical form to searching interrogations of the role of the critic in the volatile digital age. Searching, challenging and always entertaining, Croggon grapples with the contradictions and delights of writing about performance, an ephemeral artform central to our cultural memory.

THE RIPPLES BEFORE THE NEW WAVE

Drama at the University of Sydney 1957-63

Before professional theatre and Australian plays, before NIDA, before an Australian film industry, before the Nimrod and La Mama, there was the Sydney University Dramatic Society (SUDS) and a rival group, the Sydney University Players. The Ripples Before the New Wave charts the history, influence and artistic resonances of these groups and their members between 1957 and 1963. Their work was ground-breaking and exciting, producing the Australian—and even world—premieres of a number of significant European plays at this time.

WONDROUS STRANGE: SEVEN BRIEF THOUGHTS ON NEW PLAYS

Wondrous Strange is a high-wire musing on what makes great plays. For anyone who is into theatre of any kind, read on... 'Mead's wide-ranging, deeply researched and erudite book makes it clear that there are no simple formulas to follow if you want to write a great play. It takes talent and great perceptive power, but finally the process is so mysteriously complex as to make it 'wondrous strange'. David Williamson
